Cicely Lubben is experienced in defending product liability and personal injury claims on behalf of manufacturers and distributors of all types of products, including farm equipment, welding products, elevators, and various electrical components.

Cicely also represents premises owners and manufacturers in toxic tort and asbestos-related litigation in Missouri and Illinois. She manages all aspects of litigation, including initial investigation, depositions, expert witness discovery, motion practice, mediation, and trial.

Cicely has also served as national counsel for manufacturers of welding rods and distributors of diacetyl in the coordinated defense of product liability claims throughout the United States.

In addition to her product liability and toxic tort practice, Cicely handles complex commercial litigation and class action litigation. She has significant experience defending breach of contract claims, business torts, and claims under consumer statutes such as the Telephone Consumer Protection Act (TCPA) and the Missouri Merchandising Practices Act (MMPA).

In her free time, Cicely enjoys attending CrossFit classes and meeting with the Book and Wine Club she started many years ago with her law school classmates.
