Ndubisi Ezeolu, Partner-in-Charge of the Tucker Ellis Los Angeles office, is an experienced litigator who focuses his practice on representing and counseling businesses, municipalities, and public entities in complex labor and employment matters.

Bisi serves as a one-stop resource for companies and their executives on a broad range of employment law issues. He has advised on and litigated virtually every wage-and-hour issue there is, including exemptions, incentive compensation, independent contractor status, off-the-clock work, overtime, meal and rest, pay practice, and PAGA claims. Bisi also has litigated a wide variety of discrimination, harassment, retaliation, wrongful termination, trade secret, and unfair business practices matters. He draws on his background in representing title insurance companies, real estate lenders, banks, and other financial institutions in lawsuits involving mortgage banking, fraudulent transfers, forgery, identity theft, and loan fraud.

Bisi devotes a significant amount of time to serving the community. He has provided pro bono services for homeowners in financial trouble and serves on the board of directors for Five Acres – a non-profit organization committed to providing children and families with mental and health services, foster care, and adoption solutions – and the Pasadena Fire Foundation.

Bisi and his wife Marisa live in Altadena with their three children. An avid sports fan, Bisi enjoys both playing sports and rooting for his favorite teams.
