

Corporate Governance

Overview

Tucker Ellis attorneys have extensive boardroom experience advising directors on the issues they confront in today's dynamic corporate governance environment—executive compensation, auditor relations, public and shareholder relations, corporate investigations, risk management, and state corporate law matters, to name a few.

Boards of directors are coming under unprecedented scrutiny from shareholders, proxy advisory firms, regulators, and the courts, exposing directors to potential personal liability. Now more than ever, directors need the cool-headed advice of lawyers who understand the issues directors face and who can gain their confidence.

Our attorneys provide real-world, practical advice. Whether our client is the company, the board, or an independent special committee, our clients' problems are our problems, and we tailor our advice to address each individual client's objectives and goals.

We assist boards of directors in reviewing and updating corporate organizational documents, corresponding with shareholder and other corporate constituents and understanding the nuances of their fiduciary duties. We advise boards on takeover preparedness, including hostile takeovers and proxy contests, shareholder activism, executive compensation matters, going-private transactions, and special committee work.

At Tucker Ellis, our corporate governance attorneys stay current on the issues that matter to today's corporate boards, and our experience enables us to provide pragmatic advice to directors to cut through the clutter and make informed decisions.
